Daily Herald, April 8, 2008

Congressmen Peter Roskam of Wheaton and Mark Kirk of Highland Park, both Republicans running for re-election, will appear at noon today at Elk Grove High School to announce legislation they say will close a Food and Drug Administration loophole on imported food. They say private labs that do tests on the food aren't required to submit all data to the FDA, making it possible for importers to shop around for a favorable test result on food that may be contaminated. Public health officials estimate food-related illnesses make 76 million people sick each year and kill 5,000 in the United States.